Mulberry

Made to Last: Circularity

An insight into how luxury British fashion brand Mulberry encapsulates circularity in its sustainability strategy and translates it to customers.

Speaker Profile

With over 10 years of in-brand experience at luxury leather goods brand Mulberry, Rosie is a pioneer for change and improvement across the company's entire sustainable spectrum. Her role as Head of Sustainability includes Board level reporting, strategy development, sourcing management and communications scrutiny.

Rosie has been integral in setting and managing sourcing thresholds and targets to improve environmental leather metrics, seeing a >30% improvement across the last 4 seasons, with a target to source 100% of leather from environmentally accredited tanneries by 2023. This work is pushing Mulberry into a pioneering space as a sustainable luxury leather brand.

The image is a composite of two photographs. The left side shows a close-up of a person's hands using a small, sharp tool to work on a piece of light-colored, textured material, possibly leather or fabric. The right side shows a sewing machine with a red bag hanging from it. The bag is light-colored with a gold-colored clasp. The sewing machine is white and has the number '867 ECO' printed on it. The background is a blurred industrial setting.
